FUHKIEN, ...	53,480*	12	62	14,777,410*	1. The surface of the earth of the Fuhkien Province, and of this portion of it especially, is very uneven, huge fantastic boulders cropping up at frequent intervals, and bluffs, hills, and brown arid mountains abounding. 2. The means of internal communication are land and water. The great highway from Peking to Canton, along which there is endless traffic, passes through this province and this (the Amoy) district, viâ Hui-an-hsien 惠安縣, Chuan-chou-fu 泉州府, Tung-an-hsien 同安縣 and Chang-chou-fu 漳州府, whence it enters the Kwangtung Province. 3. Seaboard.

* The area of the province in English statute miles, and its population, are according to the Imperial Census of 1812. No addition is made to the then estimate, in the belief that the accepted estimate for the population of China generally is enormously exaggerated. An analysis by Baron von Richthofen of the population of Chekiang, founded on his own observations, gives the estimate as 8,000,000, whereas the census of 1812, usually adopted as authoritative, puts it at 26,000,000.

The 12 Prefectural cities comprise 10 Fu, including that of Taiwan in Formosa, and 2 Chou cities, namely Yung-chun-chou and Lung-yen-chou.

The 62 District cities include 4 in Formosa.
